

March 20, 2020

Greetings PPJers,

We know many of you are anxious for definitive info on what to expect upon your arrival in French Polynesia. Sorry to say there is no good news on that subject. But the new rules and policies are evolving. As you can imagine, it is very complicated for the administrators of different islands or towns to agree on a common policy for all arriving yachts.

The bottom line is that no foreign or locally based vessels will be able to cruise inter-island for the foreseeable future. Therefore officials encourage all crews who have not yet left the West coast of the Americas to alter their plans until the pandemic subsides.

For those of you who are now underway, we expect to outline landfall and clearance options for you shortly.

Thanks for your cooperation and understanding. We wish we had better news.

-- Andy

Andy Turpin

Director, Pacific Puddle Jump